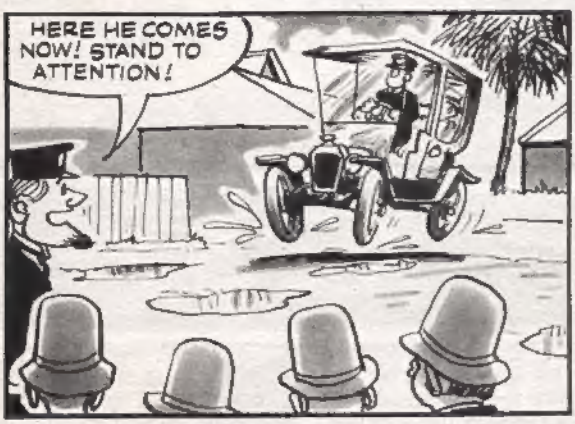
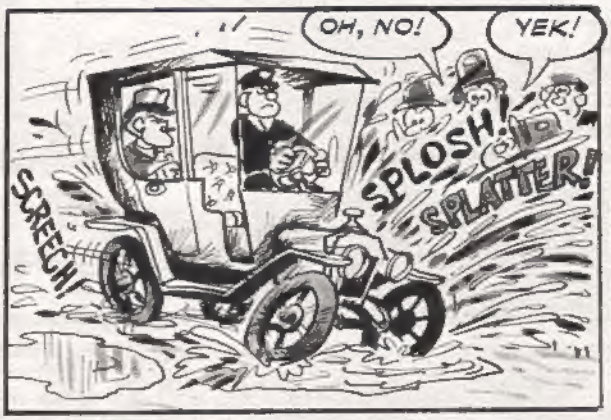
YOU HORRIBLE LOT!..GET YERSELVES CLEANED AND POLISHED BY THIS AFTERNOON! THE POLICE COMMISSIONER IS COMING TO INSPECT YOU!





NEVER MIND, BOYS...THAT LITTLE OUTBURST HAS DONE THE TRICK, YOU'RE AS CLEAN AS EVER!
WHAT A CRYING SHAME THE COMMISSIONER COULDN'T HAVE SEEN US LIKE THIS!

Next week, The Case of the Sneaky Smog Smuggler!

ORLANDO

THREE submarines have made an incredible raid on two bullion ships, moored in the Thames. The police hurry to drop submarine nets at the mouth of the river to prevent the thieves escaping out to sea, but after hours of waiting the crooks make no attempt to get out of the Thames . . .

B02

WE'VE BEEN WAITING FOR HOURS! IF THEY WERE COMING THIS WAY THOSE BULLION BANDITS WOULD HAVE SHOWN UP BY NOW!

MAYBE THEY'RE LYING LOW...WAITING FOR US TO GIVE UP! THEN THEY'LL SLIP OUT TO SEA

YOU COULD BE RIGHT! BUT THEY CAN'T STAY DOWN THERE FOR EVER!

SO THE SUPERINTENDENT ARRANGES A FULL-SCALE SEARCH OF THE THAMES, LEAVING THE NETS IN POSITION AND ONLY LETTING SURFACE VESSELS THROUGH...

WE'VE BEEN USING THE 'ASDIC' SUBMARINE DETECTING DEVICE FOR TWO DAYS NOW...THE SUBS ARE DEFINITELY NOT IN THE THAMES!

A DAY LATER...

I'M CALLING THE SEARCH OFF! SOMEHOW THE SUBS MUST HAVE SLIPPED AWAY WITH THE GOLD!

THIS WILL GO DOWN AS THE MOST SUCCESSFUL CRIME OF THE DECADE!

A FEW WEEKS LATER THE POLICE ADMITTED COMPLETE DEFEAT, BUT ORLANDO AND STEVE WERE STILL PUZZLING THE MYSTERY...

I JUST CAN'T GET THAT ROBBERY OUT OF MY MIND! IT HADN'T OCCURRED TO ME BEFORE, BUT THIS CREEK IS A POSSIBLE ESCAPE ROUTE... IT'S ONE OF THE FEW THAT CAN BE NAVIGATED!

IT'S JUST POSSIBLE IF THEY TRAVELLED ON THE SURFACE AT NIGHT NOBODY WOULD'VE SEEN THEM... BUT WHERE COULD YOU HIDE THREE SUBS OUT HERE?

WE'LL PULL OVER FOR A REST WHILE I EXPLAIN MY THEORY ABOUT THE ROBBERY!

MIGHT BE WORTH LOOKING INTO!

LOOK THERE, STEVE! THIS IS A FUNNY PLACE TO BRING A HELICOPTER DOWN!

THESE BOYS ARE UP TO NO GOOD... THEY'RE GOING TO A LOT OF TROUBLE TO DISGUISE THAT HELICOPTER!

SO THAT'S IT! A TUNNEL!

LET'S GET THE BOAT AND FOLLOW THEM!

OKAY!.. BUT WE'LL WAIT UNTIL THEY'RE OUT OF SIGHT!

I WOULDN'T BE SURPRISED IF THIS IS WHERE THOSE BULLION BANDITS WERE HIDING THEIR SUBS!

IF IT IS, THEY WON'T TAKE KINDLY TO US POKING AROUND!

IN A CONTROL ROOM AT THE OTHER END OF THE TUNNEL BLAKE EDWARDS, LEADER OF THE BANDITS, WATCHES ORLANDO AND STEVE ON A VIDEO SCREEN...

I'LL FLOOD THE TUNNEL... THAT'LL PUT AN END TO THESE INTERFERING CRIME-FIGHTERS!

OH, NO! SOMEBODY'S FLOODING THE TUNNEL... WE'LL BE DROWNED!

How to balance a penny on a glass

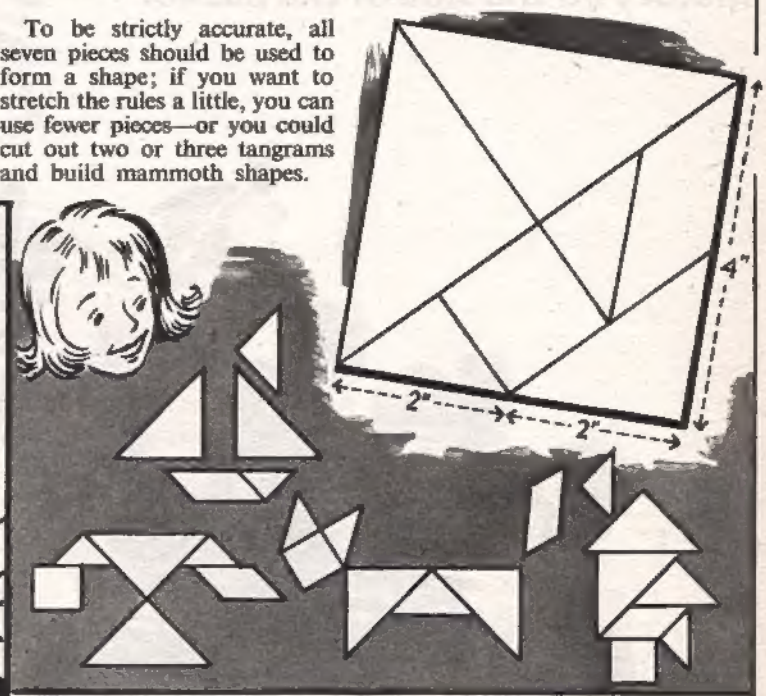
At first sight, this trick looks impossible; but what you are demonstrating is a counter-balance. The weight of the fork handles is trying to tilt the penny upward (and if you touch them the penny will actually rise). At the same time, the weight of the prongs is pulling the penny downward and the result is equilibrium. Counter-balances are widely used in engineering, particularly in massive constructions such as cantilever bridges.

How to make a Chinese Puzzle

You can find this puzzle described in dictionaries under the name of tangram, which was given to it when it became popular in Western countries more than a hundred years ago. In China, where it has been a popular pastime for several thousand years, the puzzle is called "ch'i ch'iao t'u" (meaning "ingenious seven-piece plan").

Mark a square of cardboard or stiff paper in the way shown here, and cut into seven pieces. The surface should preferably be black, or blackened, so that the pieces can be combined to form silhouettes of animal shapes, faces, figures or objects.

To be strictly accurate, all seven pieces should be used to form a shape; if you want to stretch the rules a little, you can use fewer pieces—or you could cut out two or three tangrams and build mammoth shapes.



How to make an electro-magnet

You will require a battery, a 3 in. iron nail, and a yard of insulated copper bell wire. Coil about half the length of wire neatly and tightly around the nail, leaving sufficient wire at each end to make contact with the battery terminals. The ends, of course, will need to be scraped of their insulation. When both connections are made, you will find that the nail will attract and pick up pins and paper clips. Release of either of the contacts will break the magnetic field, and the pins and clips will fall.

A more powerful electro-magnet can be made by using a stronger battery, or by connecting two or more batteries in series (that is, with the positive terminal of one battery connected to the negative of the next). But don't on any account connect to the mains.

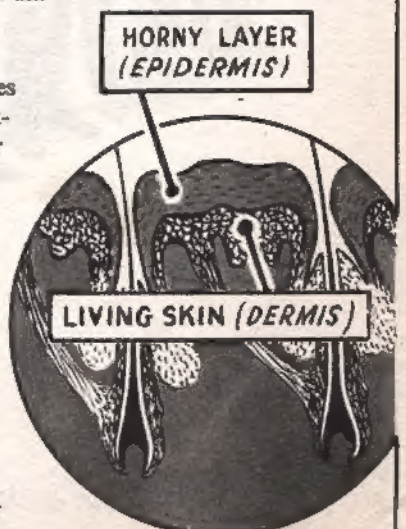
Electro-magnets have an enormous number of uses, including electric bells, loudspeakers and tape-recorder heads.

How does the snail grow its shell?

The snail's shell is a form of skin. The living cells, inside, form layers which gradually get harder and harder, until on the outside of the shell they are unrecognisable as skin at all.

Snails, of course, are not the only creatures to have this trick of converting skin into rock-hard substances. We ourselves produce finger and toe nails from skin, in a way very similar to the formation of a shell, and some animals produce horns. A close inspection of the base of a nail or horn will show how cells produce a soft skin which gradually hardens and is pushed outward.

The picture here shows the layers of the human skin. The true, living skin, which bleeds and hurts when touched, is known as the dermis. It produces a dead outer layer, part of which rubs away every time we wash. This is called the horny layer, cuticle, or epidermis. You can also see magnified hairs, with muscles attached to their roots.



How to spin an egg and make it stand on end

Place a hard-boiled egg upon a smooth surface. With a swift twist of the fingers the egg will start to spin and rise by itself, standing on one end as it spins. It will need practice.

In effect, the egg has become a gyroscope—a spinning wheel which, if fitted into a single-wheel car or a mono-rail train, will keep the vehicle upright. A spinning object not only tries to keep spinning, but it also tries to keep its axis motion-less, or moving in a straight line. This law of rotating bodies is made use of in the gyroscopes which guide aeroplanes and missiles. The earth itself is a kind of gyroscope, spinning on its poles.
